

How can the reading and math performance of students with autism help assess the assistance they need to succeed in general education classes?

Methods

78 children with autism participated for 30 months to assess their academic development.

Regular reading assessments can help students get the help they need in classrooms

Results

Reading fluency helped associate whether the students would be high achieving or low achieving in general education.